

Places still available on Award Winning Archaeological Project

If you fancy spending part of this summer doing something different, and learning a new skill, why not try archaeology? Places are still available on week long and day courses offered by the Sedgeford Historical and Archaeological Research Project (Sharp), based at Sedgeford, West Norfolk.

Founded in 1996, the Sedgeford Historical and Archaeological Research Project is one of the largest archaeological projects in Britain, encompassing multiple sites and periods, and a wide range of historical and archaeological techniques. The Project is run by a team of highly experienced archaeologists and teachers, all of whom believe that all those who participate have an equal say how the project is run.

We welcome everyone, regardless of previous experience of archaeology, on our on-site basic excavation and recording courses. This is the place to start if you have always wanted to have a go, and it is also particularly suitable for anyone who is thinking about studying archaeology in the future.

If you have already got some experience, or you just don't fancy getting on your hands and knees, we also offer a wide range of specialised training courses in different aspects of archaeology - all taught by highly qualified specialists, using hands on material from our sites.

Fees are very reasonable, and include options for camping on our site, or making your own arrangements. Courses are open to adults aged 16+ , although younger teenagers may be accommodated by arrangement.
