

School leadership in interesting times

Revisiting the fundamental principles of leadership for learning

A day of discussion framed by John MacBeath and colleagues from the Faculty and including presentations from Headteachers

Key questions include:

- How do we stay focused on learning in such uncertain times?
- What do we know about successful leadership for learning?
- How can leadership be nourished and sustained?

The day will be introduced by John MacBeath who will offer a framework for our discussions. A number of presentations from headteachers and others will provide the stimulus for structured discussion and reflection with colleagues. The aim of the day is to revisit principles of Leadership for Learning and generate proposals which can guide practice and frame the debate about school leadership. The outcomes will be documented and circulated through the LfL website to provoke a wider discussion.

The event has been designed primarily for senior leaders in collaboration with a number of headteachers in the region. Limiting the participation to no more than 50 participants will enable us to ensure maximum engagement with the issues.

Participants are encouraged to bring a colleague from their senior leadership team and a second place is offered at reduced cost.

Thursday May 26th 2011
9.30am to 4pm, University of Cambridge Faculty of Education

Early Bird Offer: £125 per person/£175 for two colleagues from same setting (including lunch & refreshments)
After March 11th: £150/£200

Faculty of Education
184 Hills Road, Cambridge, CB2 8PQ

To book please contact Katie: lfl@educ.cam.ac.uk
Tel: 01223 767621 Fax: 01223 767602
www.leadershipforlearning.org.uk