Using the outdoors to work with challenging behaviour (OCN Level 3)

A three day accredited training course relevant to both primary and secondary practitioners, designed to build confidence, understanding and practice in working with learners with challenging behaviour and to explore how natural outdoor spaces can support their needs.

This course is designed to explore how using methods within the natural world can benefit learners' emotional and social development, as well as supporting practitioners' skills in working with learners' needs and supporting them effectively.

Over the three days we will delve into: what challenges us as leaders in the outdoors; theory about challenging behaviour; up-to-date neural research; triggers and causes for challenging behaviour; ways of dealing with 'real life' scenarios; de-escalation and formulating/reviewing your own policies - including looking at the validity of sanctions and rewards.

The course is led by Jon Cree, a nationally renowned trainer within the outdoor and environmental education sector.

This course offers nationally recognised accreditation at Level 3 through the Open College Network (OCN).

Dates: 10th, 11th and 12th March 2014

Time: 9.00am - 5.00pm
