

Getting outside for Primary Geography

A hands-on day of Geography at beautiful Holt Hall where we take inspiration from the outdoor environment and explore lots of practical ideas for fieldwork

Course Outline

If we want to “inspire in pupils a curiosity and fascination about the world that remains with them for the rest of their lives” (N.C.), and develop “curious, interested learners” (OFSTED); what better way to achieve this than by immersing pupils in real-world geography outside of the classroom?

The course will provide ideas for engaging fieldwork and aims to increase your confidence in getting out of the classroom. We will undertake a series of practical workshops, including two outdoor sessions.

A recent teacher said: “A fantastic day – well paced, engaging and full of practical ideas. Extremely useful and very enjoyable – thank you.”

- By the end of the course participants will:-

Feel confident in using the outdoor environment for hands-on geography.

- Develop geographical and cross-curricular activities that develop pupils' geographical skills.
- Discuss and share ideas for outdoor geography with other primary teachers
- Find out how to locate existing good practice, resources and further support
