

Visit to Norfolk by Prof. Robin Alexander

Lessons for Policy and Practice in Primary Education

Ten years on from the “Three Wise Men” report, what have we learnt from international research?

Heads of primary phase schools are invited to come along to Norwich Professional Development Centre on Wednesday 17th April 2002 at 2pm to hear Robin Alexander speak about his recent work on international comparisons in primary education. Robin, as you remember, was one of the famous trio who reported on primary education a decade ago and did much to fuel the debate about primary schools since then.

His research is challenging and illuminating. Whether we agree with all that he concludes, the opportunity to debate where primary education has come from, and could go, is one we should grab at every opportunity.

This is one of a series of seminars we will be holding over the next two years to support leaders in the county's primary phase schools. Please note that places are limited to the first 90 applicants. The fee for this seminar will be £15.

His book “Culture and Pedagogy.....” which has recently been published, provides a fascinating account of his findings. This visit provides us with an exciting opportunity to discuss and debate with him some of the implications for us all.

The forum will be chaired by Fred Corbett, Assistant Director and Head of Advisory Services.
