Drama as a Medium for Integrating Reading, Writing, Speaking and Listening at

"Teaching should ensure that work in speaking and listening, reading and writing is integrated."
National Curriculum for English (1999)

"It would be of value to many schools to have access to materials, ideas and strategies in the imaginative implementation of the National Literacy Strategy" p79 "All our Futures" DCMS, DfEE (1999). This cross-phase course will assist teachers to use drama methodology to provide creative and engaging contexts for the teaching of literacy objectives in an integrated way.

Working practically with text, participants will have the opportunity to actively explore and devise character, setting and plot and engage with integral reading and writing activities.

Participants will have opportunities to:

- investigate and generate text individually and in groups
- develop a basic understanding of key drama strategies
- actively use drama to link the heard, written and spoken word.

Course Leader: Patrice Baldwin, Adviser for the Promotion of the Arts in Schools.

Refreshments will be provided.
