As the Key Stage 3 strategy moves into its fifth year the emphasis is now on a Secondary Strategy for school improvement. From a pupil's perspective, moving from Key Stage 3 to Key Stage 4 may be less marked than other key stage transitions because it does not usually involve a change of school.

During this day we will focus on:

- ways in which departments can help pupils make a confident start to Key Stage 4.
- stimulating pupils' interest and keeping them engaged.
- current GCSE performance implications for teaching, learning and curriculum content.

It is intended that this day will provide opportunities for colleagues to share good practice and discuss current issues relating to the Smith Report.
