

Science in a Suitcase @ Colchester Castle

Sunday 9th March

Colchester and Ipswich Museum Service is welcoming 'Science in a Suitcase' to Colchester Castle for special performances throughout the day in celebration of National Science and Engineering Week.

This fun and lively performance features two scientists, one suitcase, and a whole lot of fun! Families can sit back and enjoy this live show as the two unconventional and comical scientists unpack their cases revealing unique and bizarre experiments. Using everyday objects from plungers to bullwhips they blend mime, music and physical comedy to demonstrate their eccentric discoveries, with lots of audience interaction too!

This budget laboratory will show you 100's of ground breaking research projects including the world's smallest planetarium, quantum hair enlargement, and centrifugal force – all with fun and humour in mind.

The funny investigations throughout the performance are compulsive viewing and great for all the family to enjoy. No strangers to comic disaster, the two scientists will always put their own reputations at risk before each others safety!

Come along and get mad for science at Colchester Castle and enjoy these performances FREE after the normal admission charge to the castle.

Performances at 12pm, 2pm and 3pm (show lasts 30 minutes).
Free after normal admission charge to the castle.
