Speaker - Carol Adams

Carol Adams became the first Chief Executive of the General Teaching Council for England (GTC) in 1999. The GTC, as the professional body for teaching, is committed to ensuring the best possible standards of learning and achievement for young people by enabling the teaching profession to achieve its optimum role in society. It does this through its advisory and regulatory work with teachers and key partners across the education landscape.

Prior to the GTC, Carol worked as a secondary history teacher in inner city schools and was involved in writing and developing materials for the classroom on gender and women's history during the 1970s and 80s. She also worked as a leader of a teachers' centre, where she was responsible for the professional development for teachers and trainee teachers, curriculum development and the production and use of classroom resources for the humanities. Carol later was a Chief Education Officer for ten years in the West Midlands.
